Synopsis

The author discusses why wind farms cause 216 wind-turbine syndromes or wind-farm diseases, as collected from anti-wind-farm residents. The author believes natural wind usually affects a large region. A wind farm usually affects a small local area. A rotating fan usually affects one room or house. Moreover, the author lists various activities in daily life, including exposure to a rotating fan while sleeping, sitting near a door crack, shoveling snow, jogging, and biking in the windy environments can cause hundreds of wind diseases. A lot of wind diseases may not be severe enough to go to the emergency room, but sometimes wind diseases can cause stroke, heart attack or sudden death. The author discusses DIY cure wind diseases, like stiff-neck pain, headache, brain tumor, and water retention in the head, and tens of other ailments. Prevention is the best cure; the author stresses the importance of protecting the wind points on the neck and the body.

Customer Reviews

I went to the website to order a different product recommended to me and was reading this book. The book lists many diseases caused or related to various activities in our daily life. A great resource for all those knowledge. The book also teach us how to prevent the diseases in daily life.

Yes, I completely agree that "Prevention is the best cure", said by the author. This is a great DIY book for everyone. Highly recommended.

I purchased this ebook as was recommended on another website. This had helpful information in it, yet did not give as much detail as I would have preferred in regards to whether wind energy affects people when using a ceiling fan above their head. I need definitive information on this. I did appreciate learning more about the commercial windmills that have popped out in the Midwest, and am sorry to hear of the negative impact on the health to the people close by.

Very helpful information to help with my vertigo
