The Room In Grandma's House

Synopsis

Tiffany Warren's great-great-grandmother, Edna, is 116 years old. She is dying, and unemployed Tiffany is elected by the family to go to Connecticut and close up Edna's century old house. When she gets there, she discovers that Edna was a collector who filled her spare rooms with junk. After a week of boxing up Edna's treasures, she finally reaches the attic. There are two rooms up there, and one is locked. After a search of the house, Tiffany finds an old brass key and opens the door. What happens next will change Tiffany's life forever. This ebook contains excerpts from A.L. Jambor's The House on the Shore and Libby the Psychic Dog in Mystery in the Mansion.

Tiffany Warren's Great-Great Grandmother Edna is the oldest living person in the state of North Carolina at 116 years old. Since Edna has been placed in hospice care, the family has sent the unemployed Tiffany to complete the task of cleaning up her great-grandmother's house. What she discovers inside the house changes her forever. I thought I had a good idea of how this book would go, but I was pleasantly surprised with the story. I was also pleasantly surprised by it's length. We learn quite a bit about Tiffany's Grandma Edna's past. And with her being 116 years old, there is a lot of history. I really enjoyed this story and would be happy to recommend it to others.

This is the second A.L. Jambor story I have read and each time I have been disappointed that it ended. I want the story to keep going because it just sucks me in right away and I can't put it down. I will be purchasing more from this author.

Loved this book. The material was not expected, I knew there was something in the room upstairs and my imagination was running away, just happy there was no bodies there. My thoughts are still thinking, like it was really part of my life. Love the experiences of the great-great-granddaughter. Good read to escape this reality. Well done.

Still wiping tears. Sweet story of love beyond hope, love of family across generations, and some self discovery. My only wish is that it was a longer novel. So much unsaid, so much story left untold!!!

Uplifting and fascinating discussion of a life lived not as happily as one could wish, but as Tiffany's sketch book shows the people she sketched growing younger and younger as memories of the past visit her and surround her. At last she sees her 116-year-old great-grandmother as a sweet young woman, and then is amazed by the next surprise. I recommend this as a short and good read.

Grandma had a life long ago, and in this life she had a love, one she could not let go. She lived Her life as if things never happened. But they did ! Now grandma is 116 years of age and nobody knows who she was or what actually happened in her life. Chosen to close her house up her great grand-daughter finds a locked room in Grandma's house. This room will open her life up to at this member of her family but also opens up all of grandma's secrets. Tiffany is not prepared for what she is to learn. A touching , THRILLING MYSTERY you are sure to enjoy. I RECOMMEND

I loved this little book. It made me feel good! Grandma Edna life was good and sad and. happy and loving and..... I'm not sure what all. It was a beautiful story with all the feelings so strong you could feel them inside you. It's a book everyone should read.. A quick fix feel good book. I really enjoyed it.

This is a cute tale. I went into it knowing it was a short story but I've seen other titles of Jambor's and thought this would be a good test. I did like the story and wished there was more. The characters were a little abrupt but the story was told. I think I've used the phrase before: this felt like the condensed version where anything extraneous was cut out. I will jump into another Jambor with high hopes of a lovely read.
