The Dead Woman's House (Ben Hood Thrillers Book 4)

Synopsis

St. Helena Island in Queensland's Moreton Bay, was a prison to some of the most vicious and dangerous criminals in Australia during the early 1900s. Many are buried there, some thrown down a deep well and left to die in agony. An old house now stands over the well. The house is empty. The old couple who lived there are dead. Some say it's haunted. Someone is trying to burn it down. Ben Hood is hired to guard the house by the stunningly beautiful granddaughter of the deceased couple. It's supposed to be an easy job. Dead easy.

Customer Reviews

Ben Hood rocks. This one stars with Rod wanting Ben to babysit a house. The house is on an island off the Australian coast. It's owned by the Cruz family. Seems the granddaughter, Samantah Cruz, is in a battle with her Mother Helen over the house which was her Mother and Father's house. Both Ivy and Alfred Cruz are dead and the property was left to the granddaughters Samantha and Irene. Helen and her husband, who used to be married to Samantha, are contesting the will and trying to get the house and property. Things are not well in Samantha's world. Samantha's sister Irene has been gone for several years. No one has seen or heard from her and Samantha fears she may be dead. The house on the island was built by Samantha's grandfather Alfred. Alfred was a man who mined gems all over the world and everyone thinks there is a hidden cache of gems somewhere in or around the house. This is why Helen and her husband want the house. Samantha's Mother is less than loving Mother. Helen wants those gems and won't let anything stand in her way. Alfred had dived to the bottom of a well when part of his house is built over. This well is rumored to contain the bones of convicts who were thrown down the well. The island at one time was home to a prison full of convicts. Alfred went down into the well but never made it back. Police divers went down after him but were almost killed when part of the well collapsed. No one has been down since and his body was never recovered. There have been attempts to burn the house down and Samantha has contacted Rod Reid of VIP for someone to protect the house.
